Background Information Communication circuits are evolving to support ever increasing data rates. The higher data rates require the application of ever-increasing voltages to components in the communication circuit. The power supply of the communication circuit is, therefore, required to provide a variety of voltages to the communication circuit. Often, the power supply of the communication circuit provides a DC output voltage to a low voltage regulator configured to produce a smaller DC voltage such as 5V. A higher voltage regulator can be used to regulate the output of the power supply to generate a DC voltage higher than the original output voltage of the power supply.

In some cases, the higher voltage regulator is configured to output a larger DC voltage than the lower voltage regulator. For instance, the higher voltage regulator may output a DC voltage of 5V and the lower voltage regulator may output a DC voltage of 3.3V. Therefore, the power supply must be able to switch between providing the DC output voltage to the lower voltage regulator and the higher voltage regulator. Therefore, it would be desirable to provide an improved power supply for communication circuits that can automatically determine when to provide output DC voltages to the higher voltage regulator or the lower voltage regulator.
