Field of the Invention This invention relates to a bearing assembly and more particularly to a slider bearing assembly which includes a double thrust surface to provide redundancy. 2. Description of the Prior Art Conventional bearing assemblies including load bearing balls are found in a variety of applications, including bearing assemblies which, for example, form part of a track reel. The conventional track reel includes a cylindrical drum having a bearing support for receiving the axis of the cylindrical drum with respect to a base which includes a pair of conical track surfaces. The bearing support is formed by a plurality of ball support members, each of which has a plurality of ball bearings which are positioned in an axial bore of the ball support member. An annular member has a ball bearing therein which is received in a mating bore formed in the ball support member. The ball support member is formed with an outer race of the ball bearing, and the annular member is formed with a ball race of the ball bearing, the ball bearing having an outer race and a ball race which coact with the ball support member. Bearings include load balancing bearings which include a load bearing ball, a load balancing bearing race and a load balancing bearing support including a plurality of ball support members, each having an axial bore in which the load balancing bearing ball and 3e33713323
