In addition to its ongoing academic programs and technology-focused bachelor's degree, Lansing State also offers a full-time certificate program in Information Security (IS). Students graduating with this certificate can become candidates for a broad spectrum of Certified Information Systems Security Professional (CISSP) certifications and the ANSI/TIA/SEC InfoSec Analyst (ISA) certification. The Information Security program is designed to prepare students to work within a full-service information security organization, and is available at no cost to employers seeking to assist in meeting their information security needs. Saginaw Valley State University . Saginaw Valley State University now offers the Bachelor of Applied Science in Information Security & Assurance, a program designed for working professionals. Information security professionals must update their professional knowledge, and new information security professionals should be aware of core information security principles, policies and practices. This program provides students with the knowledge, skills and abilities needed to secure information and information systems of any size or complexity. Students will learn the fundamentals of cyber security, network security, digital forensics, incident response and business continuity and disaster recovery. The program also covers information security policies and standards and ethical issues associated with information security. Students will graduate with a Bachelor of Applied Science in Information Security & Assurance degree. The University of Toledo . The U of T is one of only five schools in the world, and the first in the U.S., to receive ISSA accreditation. The program has expanded in recent years to include a Bachelor's of Applied Science in Security, which is aligned with both ISO/IEC 25002 and ISSEPs (Information Security Standards for Software Engineers) standards. The Bachelor of Applied Science in Security program is recognized by the International Information System Security Professionals Board (IISSPB) as the only graduate certificate on its roster. All students in the program receive a CISSP preparation certificate once they have met the program requirements. The program has been developing faculty with the expertise to teach the subject matter so that it will be considered by employers for hire as an accredited degree. More information is available at
