The permanency planning hearing shall be a review of the appropriateness of the initial permanency plan, the appropriateness of the court's progress in implementing the initial permanency plan, and the appropriateness of further efforts to facilitate reunification. In re P.L., 778 N.W.2d 26, 30 (Minn. 2010). 4 The record shows that the DHS made reasonable efforts to reunify appellant with the children. At the initial permanency planning hearing, the court approved a case plan developed by the DHS that included one of the goals of a concurrent planning process and included the establishment of a case plan if it was appropriate. The case plan included a referral to the agency for a psychological evaluation of appellant to address her mental-health issues and her lack of a support network. The DHS made three attempts to obtain a psychological evaluation of appellant to determine what services would be appropriate for her. Although two of these attempts were successful, they required a medical release signed by a medical doctor or appropriate physician, and appellant refused to complete these evaluations. As a result, the DHS, at the initial permanency planning hearing, recommended to the court that
