Q: How to add self to the list of accepted answers to prompt somebody for an upvote?

Sometimes, when somebody answers my question (I upvote it of course, but may not leave an answer myself) I'd like them to feel encouraged to upvote it. I suggest that could be made easier by having accepted answers shown as a list of answers with the OP's name under them.

Ideally this would be a prompt you could get just by tapping on the answer so as not to impede the original question-asking behaviour, but I can live with either of the following modal behaviour methods: Adding a "+1" button to each accepted answer. Adding "An upvote" button to the answer's comment box. A: This is actually a status-completed feature you can access via a new menu item on the answer page: ... & it's even better. The button brings up the same prompt at the bottom of the page, but then you can just hit the upvote button and it will add the +1 automatically: #pragma warning(push) #pragma warning(disable:4244) // Conversion was truncated in Base64Decode... #pragma warning(disable:4305) // 'parameter' : truncation from 'unsigned long' to 'unsigned short'; conversion will be imprecise #pragma

Q: Programmatically select valid email address in notepad++ I have a program where the user needs to enter a valid email address, and I would like to search for any invalid email addresses in a.txt file. A: You can run a search, such as ".*@example.com", but there is no way to tell whether the mail address entered is valid or not without relying on the user entering a valid address. If you can run on the server side, you could parse the email address by testing the syntax of the email address and avoiding sending to invalid email addresses.
