A total of 77 children have been rescued from Nepal's Mount Everest and other high-altitude regions, including eight babies, an official has said. A total of 77 children have been rescued from Nepal's Mount Everest and other high-altitude regions, including eight babies, an official has said. On Tuesday, a group of 9-month-old babies were rescued by a team of doctors from a snow-covered camp on the slopes of Mount Everest at the world's highest base camp. Most of the children are under the age of 10, the Himalayan Children's Fund Nepal director Tanmay Tamang said. The children were rescued after experiencing high altitude sickness, which can be life-threatening or even fatal, according to officials and experts. "All children were suffering from vomiting, weakness and headache," said Brigadier General (retired) Bikash Man Bikash Gide, the former deputy chief executive officer at the Ministry of Tourism in Nepal, as quoted by AFP news agency. The children came from low-income families and were from different villages around the Everest 6d1f23a050
