I wasn't entirely sure how to do it last night, but I've used T-bills and TIPS to do this in the past, and that worked. If we were in a different decade, I'm sure I'd be feeling differently, but the dollar was quite strong. In fact, even though Canada's economy was also booming, I felt a little better about our foreign reserves because the government bonds of a big country like the UK, even in the face of Brexit, is unlikely to plunge. Yet I could see the price creeping up against the lower-interest-rate people around the world, making us more of a destination and less of a refuge. Other countries also tend to move up against us, because they have less confidence in their own currencies; there's a certain arbitrage. I'm with Douglas and his mantra. I like the headline from The Economist. "The euro zone economy is only recovering—not growing." My personal plan is to spread my dollar 6d1f23a050
