IAR Embedded Workbench provides design-time capabilities and efficient code generation. Design time tools include state machine design, core generation, coding assistance, unit testing, Simulink®, Design Wizard® and the graphical CAD editor IAR visualCAD. For simulation and hardware debug, IAR Embedded Workbench is integrated with the powerful online solution of IAR Systems Xpedior EDA. IAR Embedded Workbench generates efficient code for Arm® processors with substantial size improvements and functionalities, as well as support for the new SIMD8/16/32 instructions. IAR Embedded Workbench provides low-level features for debugging Arm® embedded development. Remote control, code debugging, code tracing, code tracing and code profiling are the major capabilities for in-circuit debugging. The debug functionality of IAR Embedded Workbench includes more than 35 debug probes and various trigger options for code debugging. IAR Embedded Workbench lets users debug code in the clock cycles on Arm® processors. IAR Embedded Workbench provides powerful online solutions for functional simulation and hardware debug of Arm® processors. Online-simulation of Arm® processors supports a wide range of processor types: microcontrollers, microprocessors, Digital Signal Processors (DSPs), as well as FPGAs. Simulation of Arm® processors is fully customizable with full control of the instruction, data and net models. IAR Embedded Workbench for Arm® processors simulates applications, peripherals, and even complete systems. For hardware debugging of Arm® processors, IAR Embedded Workbench provides a set of powerful debug probes. The online probe interface provides an overview and a detailed view of all the parameters of the debug probes.
