between two Android devices using Bluetooth socket. When a DeviceA sends a string "1", a DeviceB should interpret this string to mean "receive" and if it receives it, a DeviceA should interpret it to mean "stop". It worked perfectly in one of the devices. In DeviceA: // DeviceA Button b; TextView tv; @Override protected void setContentView(R.layout.activity_main); b = (Button) findViewById(R.id.connect); tv = (TextView) findViewById(R.id.strings); b.setOnClickListener(new View.OnClickListener() { @Override public void onClick(View

v) { if (tv.getText().toString().equals("1")) { tv.setText("stop"); } else { tv.setText("send"); } } }); // Activity B // Connect Button Clicked private void connectBT() { try { mSocket = new BluetoothSocket(mBluetoothAdapter.getAddress()); } catch (IOException e) { e.printStackTrace(); } try { mSocket.connect(); } catch (IOException e) { e.printStackTrace(); } // On connection public void onConnectionStateChange(BluetoothSocket socket, int status, boolean connected) { Log.i("inside", "connected"); if (status == BluetoothDevice.STATE_CONNECTED) { mBTStatus = "Connected"; try { InputStream inputStream = socket.
